Exploring your results

	Take time to understand your report. Consider your response rate to determine how representative your results are of the views of your colleagues.
	Most questions in this report have information about the proportion of colleagues responding positively, neutrally or negatively.
	Identify the areas where you are performing well. These will tend to be high results which are notably above any comparative results. Celebrate these results.
	Identify areas that need improvement. These will be the lower results, and/or those which are scoring notably below your comparators.
	Generally a difference of <math>\pm 5</math> percentage points is worthy of attention, but the size of the group is important. Changes in small groups can be unreliable. A result that appears as 0% or blank may either represent a true 0% result, or a situation where a small count means the result has been suppressed to protect employee privacy.

* These questions were asked of those who either identified as being disabled, or chose prefer not to answer or don't know to that question and said yes to having either a neurodivergent or mental health condition. This was 3.5% of staff at your agency.

These results likely underestimate the prevalence of disability in the workforce. A different method was used to measure disability in 2021, so results are not comparable between time periods.
